You are receiving this notice because you are registered with the Minnesota Pollution Control Agency (MPCA) to receive electronic notification of this rule proceeding.

The MPCA announces an official public comment period on proposed amendments to state water quality standards, which will establish a Tiered Aquatic Life Uses (TALU) framework. The 45-day comment period is open from December 19, 2016, until 4:30 p.m. on February 2, 2017. The proposed amendments are to Minnesota Rules, Chapters 7050 (Water Quality Standards for Protection of Waters of the State) and 7052 (Lake Superior Basin Water Standards), relating to Tiered Aquatic Life Uses and Modification of Class 2 Beneficial Use Designations.

To review a copy of the MPCA's dual notice of intention to adopt the proposed rule amendments without a public hearing, unless 25 or more persons request a hearing, and notice of hearing, if 25 or more requests for a hearing are received, please go to the following MPCA Web page:

<https://www.pca.state.mn.us/public-notice>. The proposed rule amendments and the Statement of Need and Reasonableness are also available at this location, and they can also be viewed, together with additional background information, at the MPCA's TALU Framework web page:

<https://www.pca.state.mn.us/water/tiered-aquatic-life-use-talu-framework>. In addition, the public notice and proposed rule amendments can be viewed in the December 19, 2016, edition of the State Register: Minnesota State Register.

As summarized in the Dual Notice, the proposed amendments will establish a Tiered Aquatic Life Uses (TALU) framework, which will modernize the MPCA's existing Class 2 water quality standards from a "one-size-fits-all" classification system for aquatic life to one that more accurately reflects the biological diversity of Minnesota's streams, rivers and ditches. This will refine the water quality goals for fish and invertebrates (e.g., insects, crayfish, mussels) in streams by creating tiers within the existing Class 2 water quality standards based on biological potential. The TALU framework will be used to designate these waters as Exceptional, General or Modified based on an assessment of their existing biological condition and habitat quality. Overall, this will improve how water quality goals are set and allow for more efficient use of resources to protect and restore waters for the benefit of aquatic life and Minnesota residents.

The MPCA is encouraging written comments on the proposed rules. As indicated in the notice, all written comments need to be submitted to the MPCA contact person by no later than 4:30 p.m. on February 2, 2017. The MPCA contact person is: Will Bouchard, MPCA, Environmental Analysis and Outcomes Division, 520 Lafayette Road North, Saint Paul, MN 55155-4194; telephone: 651-757-2333; Fax: 651-297-7709; or email: talurulemaking.pca@state.mn.us. Please contact Mr. Bouchard if you have any questions related to the proposed amendments. If you have questions regarding how to submit comments or inquiries related to the administrative rulemaking process, please contact Kevin Molloy at 651-757-2577.

Tiered aquatic life uses (TALU) framework

UPDATE: The MPCA announces an official public comment period on proposed amendments to state water quality standards, which will establish a TALU framework. The 45-day comment period is open from December 19, 2016, until 4:30 p.m. on February 2, 2017. See the Rulemaking section below for more information.

Minnesota is proposing to adopt changes to its water quality standards (Minn. Rule Chapters 7050 and 7052), which will establish a tiered aquatic life uses (TALU) framework for rivers and streams. The proposed rule amendments affect Class 2 (Aquatic Life) standards.

The TALU framework represents a significant revision to the water quality standards of the state's aquatic life use classification. It builds upon existing water quality standards to improve how water quality in streams and rivers are monitored and managed. Additionally, these changes will advance the ability to identify stressors and develop effective mechanisms to improve and maintain the condition of waters in Minnesota.

Adopting the proposed Minnesota TALU framework will achieve the following goals:

- Establish biological water quality standards. This will provide a more direct method to measure and protect biological health and identify water quality problems that chemical measurements alone might miss.
- Protect high quality water resources. The framework will provide a mechanism to identify and protect high quality water resources.
- Provide a mechanism to appropriately and reasonably classify and assess modified water resources. These include channelized streams and ditches.
- Improve stressor identification. This will provide greater accuracy when assessing the stressors that impact Minnesota's water resources.

This will enhance the protection and maintenance of the biological, chemical and physical integrity of water resources in the state.

Rulemaking

On December 19, 2016, the MPCA published its notice of intention to adopt proposed amendments to state water quality standards (Minnesota Rules, Chapters 7050 and 7052), which will formally establish a TALU framework, in the Minnesota State Register. The notice, which explains how to provide comments on the proposed amendments, is also posted below in the Rulemaking Documents section, together with the proposed amendments and Statement of Need and Reasonableness.

Background

Why does Minnesota need a tiered aquatic life use framework?

The Clean Water Act (CWA) requires states to assign beneficial uses to waterbodies and to develop water quality criteria to protect those uses. Most surface waters in Minnesota are protected for aquatic life and recreation. Traditionally, aquatic life has been protected through the application of water chemistry based standards. However, the use of only chemical and physical water quality standards to protect aquatic life may provide an incomplete assessment. Measuring one, two or even a handful of chemical and physical parameters as a surrogate for protection of aquatic life can miss impairments. The TALU framework relies on a combination of biological, physical, and chemical monitoring to measure the attainment of aquatic life goals directly. The TALU framework also produces a systematic process with a monitoring and assessment program that collects the right kinds of data which can be used at the same scale that management is being applied. As a result, monitoring and assessment work in parallel with water quality standards to develop effective standards that result in the protection of designated uses.

What is the TALU framework being considered?

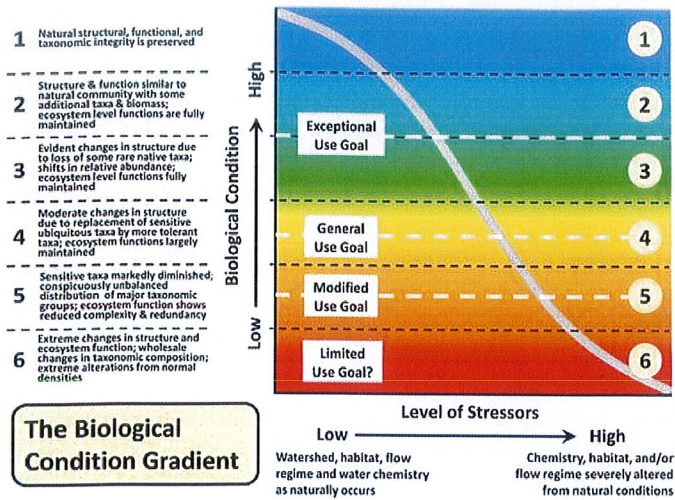

The TALU framework will move Minnesota's aquatic life standards from a "one-size-fits-all" approach to one that protects appropriately classified waters based on their biological potential. This means that high quality or Exceptional Use waters will be given additional protection to ensure that the condition of these habitats are maintained. The majority of streams and rivers will continue to be protected as General Use or good quality waters. Some waters that are impacted by legacy or historical impacts (for example ditches) could be eligible for a lower goal if it is demonstrated that the biology cannot attain at least the General Use. Class 2 waters meeting Exceptional Use biological goals can be redesignated as an Exceptional Use because the biology has demonstrated that the use is attainable. Similarly, waters meeting the General Use goal would be designated General Use. However, if the General Use goals are not met, then additional analyses are used to determine the attainable use. Specifically, a Use Attainability Analysis (UAA) would need to be performed to determine if the habitat is limiting the biology and what is the cause of the poor habitat. Biological communities that are limited by habitat that are a result of legal activities (for example ditch maintenance) could be redesignated Modified Use.

Exceptional Use	General Use	Modified Use
High quality waters with fish and invertebrate communities at or near undisturbed conditions	Waters with good fish and invertebrate communities that meet or should meet minimum goals	Waters with legally altered habitat that prevents fish and invertebrate communities from meeting minimum goals

Biological goals for TALU are based on a scientific model called the biological condition gradient (BCG) and reference waters. The BCG model describes how biological communities change with increasing levels of stress. The BCG is based on the concept that waterbodies receiving higher levels of stress have biological communities with lower condition compared to waterbodies receiving lower levels of stress (see Figure 1 below). The BCG provides a common framework to interpret changes in biological condition regardless of geography or water resource type. It permits a more accurate determination and classification of Minnesota's aquatic resources which improves the ability to make well-informed decisions on aquatic life designations. The BCG is supported by reference condition sites. These reference condition sites are waters that are minimally or least disturbed and therefore serve as a benchmark for assessment. Goals or biological criteria developed using both the BCG and reference sites largely agree and serve to strengthen these goals.

Exhibit G

What are the major goals/outcomes of the TALU framework

Biological standards. Water quality standards based on chemical and physical criteria, such as dissolved oxygen and pH, do not directly measure the health or condition of biological communities which include fishes, insects, mussels, aquatic plants and algae. Although chemical and physical measures can tell us a lot about water quality, these criteria are essentially surrogates for a direct measure of the biological community. This can be problematic due to the large number and diversity of the stressors that impact biological communities which include chemicals, reduced oxygen, sedimentation, increased temperature, and habitat degradation (see figure 2 below). As a result, the monitoring of chemical and physical parameters for all potential stressors can become too cumbersome to be practical. Rather than measuring the wide variety of stressors, biological communities can be monitored as they are a direct measure of the response of the biota to a wide range of physical and chemical stressors. In other words, their condition is a reflection of all the impacts of multiple stressors over time. Chemical standards have been, and will remain, an important tool for restoring and protecting beneficial uses. However, the addition of biological monitoring and biological standards will complement them and will result in refinement of chemical criteria.

Figure 2 —Five major factors that determine the integrity of aquatic resources

Five major factors that determine the integrity of aquatic resources

High quality water resources. Another limitation of Minnesota's current water quality framework is that high quality resources are often under protected. At present there is a framework to protect the degradation of high quality waters called antidegradation, but there are still elements of Minnesota's antidegradation provisions in rule that can allow considerable degradation of these waters without violating the CWA. TALU establishes a higher tier of use to protect these high quality waters. Once a water body has been established as meeting the requirements of a high quality water resource, the resource needs to be protected to maintain that status. The concept of protecting the "existing" use of a waterbody is one of the most important tenets of the CWA.

Modified or limited water resources. There are water resources in this state that will not in the near future meet the CWA interim goals due to legacy impacts. These legacy impacts are those impacts that preceded the CWA. This includes streams under drainage maintenance or other irreversible hydromodification that preclude attainment of goals. For example, channelized streams and ditches would be included in this category. TALU provides a mechanism to monitor and set realistic expectations for waters that are unlikely to meet goals due to legacy impacts. The expectations fully protect the existing uses of each waterbody and recognize their historical and current site specific context. This element of TALU allows for the establishment of realistic expectations for waterbodies that have multiple and well established uses.

Stressor Identification: When biological communities are determined to not be attaining General Use goals, the MPCA will need to have the tools and knowledge to determine in a timely manner if a lower use is appropriate and if the water body does not attain the designated use, what stressors are resulting in nonattainment. TALU incorporates the concept of pollution into assessments of condition and provides an opportunity to address the key stressors that are the most determinant of biological condition. In doing so, TALU allows assessment and water quality management efforts to focus on the correct problems.

Some other goals/benefits of TALU adoption include:

- Monitoring of incremental improvements in water quality. This allows entities working to improve water quality to document and show progress toward a goal.
- TALU helps guide development and modification of water quality standards to produce improved standards.
- TALU merges the design and practice of monitoring and assessment with the development and implementation of water quality standards.
